News from the Samí Cultural Center of North America

Winter/Dálví

The Sami Cultural Center continues our tradition of celebrating Sami National Day with an open house at the Center and special programing about Laponia at UMD. Sami National Day commemorates the first general meeting of Sami people gathering across national borders to discuss common interests, which took place in Trondheim, Norway on February 6, 1917. Sami National Day is celebrated with wearing of gakti, special concerts and cultural events, and displaying the Sami flag.

One Book Northland 2018

One Book Northland is an annual program of area libraries in which the entire community is encouraged to read the same book and engage in a community-wide dialog about the book. Other related events are also planned. This year the Sami Cultural Center is pleased to announce the libraries' selection of Katharine Johnson's new novel The Wind and the Drum, an adventure story set in Sápmi in 1690, as this year's read. There is a full schedule of Sami related movies, author programs, and book club discussions set for April 2018. The Center hosted a launching party for the book in October and we are excited to have the opportunity to educate the community about Sami culture and history through Katharine's book

The Sami flag was designed by Sámi artist Astrid Båhl based on an earlier design by Synnøve Persen. It was officially recognized in 1986. It represents the Sami people and not a geographical area. The colors are the ones often used in gákti—traditional Sami dress—and are called the Sami colors. The blue in the circle represents the moon and red the sun. The flag is flown on Sami National Day and a number of other special days.

We are often asked about membership opportunities at the Sami Cultural Center. We have preferred not to have a membership based on a structured system, so that everyone can feel welcome to participate in our activities without being tied to a membership. We do however appreciate and encourage those wanting to support the work of the Sami Cultural Center to contribute to our work and mission using the form below or the online donation process on our web site—www.samiculturalcenter.org. We so appreciate your donation in any amount made at any time and send grateful thanks to our many contributors!
